Before you hire a joiner in Jersey

Fitted furniture needs no permission, but windows, doors, decking and sheds come with Jersey rules of their own. A short guide.

Replacing windows and doors

Replacing windows and doors doesn't usually need planning permission if they stay the same size and in the same place, unless the property is listed, it's a shop front, or a planning condition has removed the right.

Replacement windows in a house do need building bye-law permission, unless the installer is registered with an approved competent person scheme that notifies the department within 30 days. In Jersey that's FENSA, CERTASS, BSI, NAPIT, NICEIC or ELECSA, or Network VEKA, not FENSA alone. Ask which scheme your joiner uses, and keep the certificate.

Energy standards for new windows

Jersey's technical guidance asks for replacement windows to reach energy rating band C or a U-value of 1.6, and doors 1.8. There's some leeway where a building's appearance has to be kept, such as a listed building.

Listed buildings

Any change to the windows or doors of a listed building needs a planning application with a heritage impact statement, made before work starts. Ask a joiner about their experience with traditional timber windows if your home is listed.

Internal changes, doors and stairs

Building bye-law permission is needed for internal changes that could affect escape routes in a fire or the structure of the building. A door in a new internal wall should be fire-resisting and self-closing.

Decking and garden sheds

Decking doesn't need planning permission up to 40cm above or below the ground, or bye-law permission under 60cm, as long as the property isn't listed.

A shed or outbuilding doesn't need planning permission up to 30 square metres in total since June 2007, if it isn't in front of the house facing a road and keeps to the height limits: 2.5m to the eaves and 3.5m overall for a pitched roof, 3m for a flat roof, and 2m within a metre of a boundary. It needs no bye-law permission up to 10 square metres, or 20 if it's at least a metre from the boundary or built of non-combustible materials.

Quotes for made-to-measure work

For a kitchen, staircase or set of windows, get a written quotation, which Jersey Trading Standards confirms is a fixed, legally binding price, and agree what happens if measurements or designs change. The Supply of Goods and Services \(Jersey\) Law 2009 covers both the materials supplied and the work.
