Good to know about Jersey produce

Look for the Genuine Jersey mark

The Genuine Jersey mark is a guarantee that a product was reared, caught, grown or made on the island. It is run by the Genuine Jersey Products Association, founded by a group of producers in 2001.

Jersey Royals and Jersey cattle

"Jersey Royal Potatoes" is a protected designation of origin, so the name is reserved for potatoes grown on the island. Under the Animal Health (Jersey) Law 2016, no cattle may be imported into Jersey, which keeps the island's herd of Jersey cows apart. Jersey Dairy says it is farmer owned.

Jersey oysters and mussels

Jersey's shellfish are farmed in Grouville Bay. Its production areas are classified Class B, which means oysters and mussels must be purified or relaid before they can be sold to eat. So buy from a registered business rather than picking your own.

Selling food you make

Anyone providing food to the public, including from home or a van, must register with Environmental Health 28 days before they start trading, under the Food (Registration of Premises) (Jersey) Order 2001. Occasional providers may not need to, so ask Environmental Health if you're unsure.
