What happens after a death in Jersey

The funeral director registers the death

In Jersey, the next of kin appoints a funeral director, who applies to the Superintendent Registrar to register the death. The application and the medical certificate of the cause of death must reach the Superintendent Registrar within five days of the death.

The Registrar also asks for the person's birth certificate, a marriage certificate or divorce decree if they had one, and a passport or identity card. Registering is free, and a death certificate costs £33.95. A burial or cremation can't take place until the death is registered.

Cremation and burial

Jersey Crematorium is on Westmount Road in St Helier, and cremations can only be booked through a funeral director. Parishes run their own cemeteries, so for a burial your funeral director or the parish hall can help.

The death grant

Social Security pays a one-off death grant of £1,231.72 if the person who died lived in Jersey and had paid or been credited with contributions. It goes to the executor or administrator, or otherwise to the person who paid for the funeral. Claim within six months of the death; the funeral director usually tells Social Security.

If the person who died was on Income Support, or you qualify and are arranging a funeral for someone in your household, a special payment may help with the cost. Get a quote and have the claim approved before you commit to anything.

Who to tell, and probate

gov.je has a list of who to contact after someone dies, including Income Tax, Social Security, the parish hall, DVS and Jersey Post. To deal with the person's money and belongings, the Probate Registry issues a grant of probate or letters of administration. A grant may not be needed if the movable estate is £30,000 or less.

Listings are free and in alphabetical order. Jersey Web is not connected with these businesses unless a listing says so: check details with each business before you book. Guidance checked 15 November 2026.
