Finding a lawyer in Jersey

Jersey has its own laws, courts and legal profession, so UK guidance often doesn't apply. This is general information rather than legal advice.

Advocates and solicitors

Jersey lawyers are admitted as advocates or solicitors of the Royal Court under the Advocates and Solicitors (Jersey) Law 1997, after Jersey qualifying exams and relevant experience. Advocates can practise before every court in Jersey. If your matter may end up in court, ask who would represent you there.

Check they can practise Jersey law

To practise as an advocate or solicitor of the Royal Court, a lawyer must be a member of the Law Society of Jersey. Its Lawyer Search lists the members authorised to practise Jersey law. An English solicitor who is not a member is overseen in England and Wales instead, so check before you rely on advice about Jersey law, property or wills.

Find a firm that does your kind of work

Several firms on this page work mainly with funds, trusts and international companies. If you need help with a house purchase, a will or a family matter, check that the firm's website lists that work before you call. Ask how it charges too.

Buying or selling a home

Freehold property in Jersey passes by contract in front of the Royal Court, on a Friday afternoon, according to law firm Mourant. A Jersey law firm acting for the buyer presents the contract, and you can attend or appoint an attorney. The buyer pays stamp duty, which you can estimate with our stamp duty calculator.

Wills and probate

Citizens Advice Jersey explains that Jersey treats movable and immovable property differently, and that a spouse, civil partner or child can be entitled to a share by law, known as légitime. So don't assume a will written for UK rules does what you want here. Ask a Jersey lawyer to check it.

Legal aid

The Legal Aid Office takes applications through its online portal. It's means-tested and only for individuals. Most criminal matters, family matters with dependent children and some civil claims are covered, but debt, employment and family matters without dependent children are not. Outside criminal cases, it's generally only for people living in Jersey. Citizens Advice says that with a legal aid certificate you can't choose your lawyer.

Small claims and work disputes

The Petty Debts Court hears claims for money owed or damages of up to £30,000, under a 2018 practice direction. For work disputes, start with JACS, which gives advice and conciliation. Time limits are short, generally 8 weeks for a Tribunal claim, so don't wait.

If something goes wrong

All Jersey law firms must have a complaints procedure, so start there. Then go to the Law Society of Jersey. Under the Law Society of Jersey Law 2005, complaints of professional misconduct should generally be made within 12 months.
